

Dear CBA South-East members,

Thank you to everyone who made our medieval conference such an enjoyable and stimulating event in November. We were treated to a range of interesting talks covering research projects from across the South East region. These included new techniques for studying the ancient landscape, in particular LiDAR, which uses lasers from planes to scan landforms over wide areas. Andrew Mayfield and Anne Bone both gave papers on current projects which have been utilising LiDAR, providing amazing details of settlements and field systems which have never been seen before over the South Downs and in Kent. Other papers covered different aspects of land-use, such as the creation and maintenance of deer parks and the pastoral history of the Weald, through to new insights into the use of graffiti in medieval homes. A fuller report on the conference will be provided in our forthcoming newsletter. Overall, we are grateful to Nathalie Cohen and Vicky Owen for organising such a successful event. Plans are already underway for the 2017 conference which promises to be something special as we will be marking our 25th anniversary as an independent charity. Please stay tuned for details.

In the meantime, we wish you all a happy and prosperous 2017!

Dr Martyn Allen
Chair, CBA South-East

Flint Drawing Day School

This day course, led by Jane Russell, will help those who wish to prepare lithic illustrations for publication and those who just enjoy drawing flint tools. In the class we will draw the tools accurately in pencil in preparation for later inking up by pen, or by computer programmes. By using shadow we will highlight the ripples and ridges of the lithic tools, and produce a three-dimensional impression, a form of representation which supplies the maximum amount of information about the technology of an artefact in each single drawing. The class is suitable for beginners and those wishing to brush up on their skills.

Fees: Members £20 / Non-Members £25

The Prehistoric Society – Uplands and Lowlands

This one-day conference is about topographic diversity and similarity of the uplands and the lowlands in prehistory: are differences in the archaeological record, and in our approaches to exploring these varied landscapes, more than just those defined by topography? Presentations will demonstrate the major impact of both traditional survey methods and recent applications such as LiDAR; examine methods and frameworks for synthesising numerous diverse datasets over large areas; consider the relationship between topography and cosmology and soils and ideology, with the underlying aim of gaining insight into the social, economic and political landscapes that overly the physical.

Tickets £40 (£20 students). Visit www.prehistoricsociety.org for more info.
